What Canada's Children Need from the Federal Government

To protect children and strengthen Canada's future, the federal government must invest in a coordinated national approach to address child and youth abuse.

Create national legislation to ensure that there is a consistent approach to supporting children and youth who have experienced abuse.

Commit federal funding to implement this approach in all communities across Canada.

Fund a national accreditation program to ensure high-quality, evidence-informed, and culturally safe services and supports.

Provide core funding for CYACC to coordinate this work nationally.

Invest in data, research, and knowledge sharing to improve responses and ensure accountability.
